

Congressional Investigations

The firm has extensive experience representing corporate and individual clients before investigative committees of the House of Representatives and the Senate. Firm lawyers have represented public companies, professional services firms, individuals (including senior executives, former cabinet secretaries and other current and former government officials) and quasi-governmental entities before many such committees, including the Senate Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations and the House Oversight and Government Reform Committee as well as the Financial Crisis Inquiry Commission and other Congressionally-authorized investigative bodies. These representations have covered diverse subject matters, including the gulf oil spill, compliance with the securities laws, alleged wrongdoing within government agencies, the 2008 Financial Crisis, inter-branch disputes and other investigative matters.
